The pot (my life is clay) 2025

The Pot (my life is clay)

The history of using clay, heating it to change its physical structure to become hard and not fall apart with water is not really known. The Jōmon culture of Japan was making pottery over 12,000 years ago but what and where the first vessel was made is not really known.

Clay truly is a wonderful material and can be shaped into virtually any form.

I was 20 when I entered the Queensland College of Art and did a couple of semesters of ceramics using the wheel and making pots with coils. It would have been close to 20 more years before I got involved with ceramics again, this time using forms: tiles, vases and jugs that came out of a mould. After about seven years of using these forms, I began to make my own shapes, generally rolling out slabs, but did make some pots on the wheel. I have had my own kiln for quite a while and clay is a big part of my practice. I often do paintings of images I have made as a tile.

After over 40 years making things, paintings, drawings and ceramics, I find it beneficial to contemplate what I make and why I do it. I need to do this. I have a deeply personal feeling for the things I make and by looking back I understand and look to refine how I work.
